We come and go; but She remains
Untouched by age's blight;
In love and dignity She reigns
Above our day and night.
Beneath Her sway the darkness flies,
And faith is born of fears—
Oh, She is throned on centuries,
And beautified by years!

Come, let us honour Her, sons of to-day,
Sons who return again, sons growing grey,—
One song for all to sing, one prayer to pray,—
Floreat Alma Mater, Alma Mater!

With each new moment's tiny stir,
The sun doth rise and sink
O'er men, whose hearts are bound to Her
By many a loving link.
They live and labour, near and far,
Alone and in the throng—
But wheresoe'er these brothers are
They have one prayer and song.

Come, let us honour Her, etc.

Oh, who can count the gracious lives,
Whose fame is Hers and ours,
The noble dead whose work survives
Beyond those halls and towers?
With praise for all who strive in truth,
And pride in all who rest,
We worship Her who kissed their youth,
And made their manhood blest!

Come, let us honour Her, etc.
